A train derailed in eastern Taiwan killed at least 50 people, and over 100 people got hurt in the accident. The crash occurred near the Toroko Gorge on the first day of a long holiday weekend. The train had been carrying more than 400 people. Most of them were hit heavily and died. Cindy was one of the passengers who survived from the terrible accident because she and her family climbed out of windows and walked along the train's roof to reach safety. However, Cindy's best friend, Wenwen, was not lucky enough to get away from this disaster.

Two days later, after reading that Wenwen's name was on the list of the dead, Cindy was very sad. She couldn't believe that Wenwen had left her and they couldn't meet each other any more. Life still had to go on, so Cindy looked for many ways to deal with her sorrow. At the same time, Cindy missed her friend so much that she often had dreams about Wenwen in the middle of the night.

After hearing her parents' advice, Cindy started writing letters to Wenwen. In each letter, Cindy wrote down one thing that she had experienced with Wenwen at school. In the end, she wrote 101 letters in total. She collected these letters and locked them in the drawer. Although Wenwen would never get these letters, Cindy thought it was the best way to remember their friendship.
